Does the Trade War Make a Difference for German Business? The recent U.S.-China trade war is now the costliest and longest running trade dispute in history. The United States is also among the largest trade partners for Germany. The European Union's (EU) largest trading partner is China. The German economy has grown steadily since the global financial crisis in 2008, but with protectionism currently in place, European and global business have been under pressure. Does Germany stand to benefit from the ongoing trade dispute with the United States? Our U.K. team found out by analyzing economic data on Germany. Domestic Demand in Germany The United States Trade Representative reported data showing the total trade deficit with Germany at $43.5 billion. In 2018, the United States imported only $70.7 billion worth of goods from Germany. Meanwhile, it exported only $133.5 billion to the country. There was a similar trade deficit in 2017, with the U.S. importing only $77.3 billion and exporting only $145.6 billion from Germany. The U.S. trade deficit with Germany has grown over the past decade, while demand for German products in the United States has been on the rise. For example, Germany's automotive industry is among the world's largest. Germany's Foreign Trade Germany's foreign trade is dominated by its exports to the EU,
