Little is known about factors that contribute to quality of life (QOL) or its interrelations with treatment-related sequelae in childhood cancer survivors (n = 872) who were cancer-free by time of their report of the onset of side effects were mailed the CCSS-DI; 545 responded. Independent samples t tests and stepwise multiple regression analyses of all survivors' responses showed that a higher burden of side effects is related to worsened subjective health status, physical function. Survivors who were on long-term treatment reported more treatment-related sequelae; a higher overall burden of side effects was related to the degree of objective impairment. Because a higher burden of side effects was related to reduced subjective health status, physical function, and activity limitation, it is important for health care providers to discuss these aspects of QOL. This may help survivors choose

I've looked for the documentation and source code and there is no document on why the check is always false. A little explanation about my concerns: Suppose that I'd like to interrupt the thread, it still runs for 200ms. Everytime I interrupt the Thread, I'd like to run a new method and call isInterrupt the thread, it still runs for 200ms. In that case, I need to call Thread.currentThread().interrupt() in the first loop. A: That's because it is false (it is an old way to check that). What they did was to replace it with a method returning if the thread is interrupted and simply called currentThread().isInterrupted() See the method javadoc for more details Title Authors Date of this Version July 2005 Comments Published in Zeitschrift für Geschichte der Reihe / Revue de l'Hist 1cdb36666d
